ACADEMIC RESEARCH LINES

A Republic, if you can keep it.

Co-primary investigator

This project investigates citizens' ambivalence and dissatisfaction with liberal democracy in selected countries in Africa, Asia, Europe, and the Americas to broaden the current understanding of populist-fueled autocracy worldwide. It uses public opinion data derived from consecutive "waves" of the World Values Surveys, the Asian Barometer Surveys, and the SAIS Surveys.

The Democratic Transition of Myanmar

Primary investigator

This project investigates the impacts of recent constitutional and government reforms, changes in civil society and electoral participation, and access to public services in Myanmar. It benefits from funding from the Luce Foundation, and t is informed by two, original sets of national level public opinion data collected in collaboration with the Asia Foundation, and the Department of Foreign Affairs of the Australian Government. Findings from the project inform policy planning and priority setting of the National League for Democracy Party, and the Ministry of Finance of Myanmar

Regime Types and Reforms Effectiveness

Primary investigator

This research project combines macro and micro approach to investigate the complex relationships between regime type and state's capacity to devise and operationalize political and economic reforms. Funding from an APSA grant supported the preparation of case studies on Hong Kong, Indonesia, Mongolia, and Vietnam, and the impacts of labor market reforms in Italy, France and Germany.

The SAIS Asia Surveys

The surveys focus on Asian major political systems that have followed different trajectories of regime evolution and are currently at different stages of political transitions.

FIELD RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

The World Bank Group
Development Economics Research/ East Asia and the Pacific Region

The Application of Hausmann, Rodrik, and Velasco Growth Model to Mongolia

(Principal Investigator: Dr Sudarsdhan Guptu)

As the Team's Political Economist, I adapted the HRV methodology to Mongolia to identify the most 'binding' short-to-medium term constraints to growth in the mineral and forestry sectors; analyzed the results from the HRV model and translated them in short to medium term policy advice for the government. Authored "Managing Natural Resources for Long-Run Broad-Based Growth", published as Chapter 6 in: Mongolia Sources of Growth Country Economic Memorandum, World Bank Policy Research Paper (peer-reviewed).

The World Bank Group
Development Economics Research/ East Asia and the Pacific Region

Negative Externalities of the Vietnamese Manufacturing Sectors
(Principal Investigator: Dr Jeremy Carew-Reid)

As the Team Leader, I adapted and applied to Vietnam the Industry Pollution Projection System to convert economic information into a comprehensive nationwide picture of pollution from manufacturing, and crated the National Pollution Index as an industrial priority-setting tool. Advised the Vietnamese Ministry of Planning and Investments and the Ministry of Industry on how to translate research results into policies for the medium term. Principal author of: Review and Analysis of The Pollution Impacts from Vietnamese Manufacturing Sectors. World Bank Technical Paper (peer-reviewed).

The World Bank Group

Poverty Reduction and Economic Management Group/ East Asia and the Pacific Region

Investment Climate Modeling for the Tourism Sector in Mongolia and Cambodia
(Principal Investigator: Dr Shubham Chaudhuri)

As the team's Political Economist, I designed and implemented the Supply and Demand Chain Survey for the tourism sector in Mongolia and Cambodia, and created original datasets with firm characteristics, business obstacles for service suppliers, and key features of the tourism sector demand side for Mongolia and Cambodia. Finally, I identified mid-term policy priorities and actions to improve competitiveness of the Mongolian and Cambodian tourism sectors based on statistical models' estimations.

The World Bank Group

East Asia and the Pacific Region, Development Economics Research Department

Poverty-Inequality-Natural Resources Nexus in Indonesia, Lao PDR and Vietnam
(Principal Investigator: Dr Bjorn Larsen)

As one of the Team's Political Economist, I co-conceptualized and developed the first Asian multi-country spatially integrated dataset to combine new and existing data on poverty, inequality, and natural resources. Also, I contributed to the development of a statistical model to estimate the relevance of the poverty–inequality-natural resources nexus in Asian countries. Research contributor to the peer-reviewed paper: Where is the Poverty–Environment Nexus? Evidence from Cambodia, Lao PDR, and Vietnam, published in World Development.

The World Bank Group

East Asia and the Pacific Region, Sustainable Development Network

The Wealth of Nations: Monetary Estimation of Produced, Natural, and Intangible Assets

As one of the Team's Political Economist, I co-conceptualized and developed an original methodology to understand the linkages between economic development outcomes and the level and composition of countries' natural wealth. Piloted the concept of economic development as a process of 'portfolio management', where exhaustible assets can be transformed through investment of resource rents, whereas renewable assets can yield sustainable income streams.
