If you would like a copy of an embargoed dissertation, please reach out to the dissertation's author or the author's primary advisor for permission. The department will not give out copies of the dissertation on-file without explicit permission. Candidates will select to embargo the dissertation for a multitude of reasons, most concerning the intellectual property of the contents and the department must respect those concerns. In the extreme case that neither the author nor the author's primary advisor can be reached and access to the dissertation is necessary, the permission of the Director of Graduate Studies will suffice.

If you are looking at this version of the compilation document after the date [presented as year/month/day] of the embargo, the link to the metadata will be the same link to where the full dissertation will be available. Note that authors may extend the embargo if they did not select the maximum time allotted – the new date will be on the page of the metadata.
