CENTER ADMINISTRATION

Center for Medical Humanities and Social Medicine 2019-Present
Associate Director

The Johns Hopkins Center for Medical Humanities and Social Medicine is an interdisciplinary teaching and research unit that bridges the humanities, social sciences, and health sciences across the campuses of Johns Hopkins University to foster innovative interdisciplinary scholarship with maximum impact, and to train undergraduates, graduate students, and health professionals with skills to apply critical social analysis to the study of health and disease.

Global Health Leadership Track 2023-Present
Director

In January of 2023 I took over the directorship of the Global Health Leadership Track at the Medical School. The mission of the Johns Hopkins Global Health Leadership Track (GHLT) is to train and empower future leaders in global health through an exchange of cultural, clinical, and educational knowledge and skills. The GHLT prepares students to leverage principles of public health, cultural humility, health equity, and health justice to better care and advocate for patients and communities, locally and abroad.

The Global Health Leadership Track includes:

- Workshop curriculum

- Mentorship
- Global health Longitudinal Ambulatory Clerkship placement
- GHLT scholarly project

UNIVERSITY EVENTS, WORKSHOPS AND ORGANIZING

Seminar Series:

Racism in Public Health: Historical Perspective and Current Challenges 2022-2023 Co-organizer

The Bloomberg School of Public Health and the Department of the History of Medicine at Johns Hopkins are hosting a speaker series on historical and ongoing forms of racism that operate in the field of public health. This series aims to confront the historical and ongoing forms of racism that exist in the field of public health, while learning about alternative methods of conducting public health that have attempted to resist and challenge such legacies.

Molina Symposium: Reckoning with Race and Racism in Academic Medicine 2022 Co-Organizer

The legacies of race and racism cast a long shadow on academic medical institutions today: ongoing scientific racism in medicine, unequal access to health care, the segregation of medical facilities, and the exclusion of African Americans and other racialized groups from medical education. Medical research and medical practice have not merely been incidentally affected by racism in broader society, but rather have been key sites for the production and reproduction of biological understandings of race. In order to develop more effective anti-racist responses to endemic health inequalities made so visible in the COVID-19 epidemic, medicine needs to fully confront these painful histories of structural violence. This conference included historians, sociologists, medical educators, medical trainees, advocates and activists from around the United States to work towards a more inclusive version of historical reckoning.

Epidemic//Endemic 2020-2021 Primary organizer

The Center for Medical Humanities and Social Medicine at Johns Hopkins brought scholars together for a yearlong discussion on questions of wider importance to the social sciences and the humanities. Our goal was to foster conversations between scholars in the medical humanities and social science traditions with those who previously may not have considered themselves situated within such discourses. While the topics of this series were not directly connected to COVID-19 we were motivated by the sudden need to connect disparate fields of analysis to questions of the medical and to health.

OTHER RELEVANT EXPERIENCE

Project Officer- Panel of Recognized International Market Experts in Finance 2012-2013

P.R.I.M.E. Finance stands for the Panel of Recognized International Market Experts in Finance, an innovative collaboration launched in January 2012. The project was established to help resolve, and to assist judicial systems in the resolution of disputes concerning complex financial transactions. P.R.I.M.E. Finance has the support of key international regulatory bodies and is complementary to the on-going financial market regulatory reform process. As project officer I was responsible for organizing and implementing projects in the four key areas of operation within P.R.I.M.E. Finance:

1. Dispute resolution services, including arbitration, mediation and the provision expert opinions, determinations and risk assessment
2. Judicial training and education of judges in the developing world on the complex financial disputes pertaining to derivatives
3. The compilation of a central database of international precedents and source materials relating to Derivatives Trading and the ISDA Master Agreement
4. Planned, fundraised and organized the P.R.I.M.E. Finance Annual Conference, an event sponsored by the majority of Magic Circle firms and representing the top Jurists, lawyers and scholars on High Finance and Derivatives trading law.
