

This survey is designed to help you reflect on what you've written this semester and the writing skills you've practiced during that time. While your writing for this class will surely come to mind, please also think comprehensively, drawing together writing experiences across all classes (and even outside of them). One objective is to help emphasize writing as an intentional and ever-evolving process, comprised of a distinct set of tools: reading, planning, drafting, revising, assessment, reflection, and more. Another is to encourage you to feel empowered to develop and carry forward the practices from your course that have worked well.

Please write your answers in the spaces below and email this document to your professor.

End of semester self-reflection

What kinds of writing assignments have you encountered in your classes this semester? Please describe your experience writing these assignments.

Have you written much outside of class this semester? If so, what and for what purposes?

What writing from any of the above do you feel particularly proud of? Why do you feel this way?

What piece of writing did you find particularly challenging / would you want to attempt again? How might you approach it differently?

What is a new strategy you've developed for working through a writing project that you want to remember going forward? This can be at any stage, from planning to revising a final draft.

In what ways has your writing changed or stayed the same this year?

Finally, what major have you declared? What writing expectations do you have going forward and what kinds of writing do you anticipate in your major coursework?
